Career Interruptions and Special Circumstances

In May 2011, I left my tenure-track position at the University of Manitoba to assume a role as a full-time public servant. Over the next six years, I continued to serve in various capacities in both the public and knowledge sectors, as a senior manager in Executive Council and the Public Service Commission, and an adjunct professor at the University of Alberta, where I taught and published in off-hours. Workload, concerns to abide by conflict of interest guidelines, and the necessity of preserving academic freedom severely limited my ability to conduct primary research or publish between 2011 and 2017. I also took parental leave in 2015. These limitations have been lifted since I assumed a full-time faculty position as Associate Professor in July 2017.
