AUGUSTANA ALUMNI LEADERSHIP AWARD

This year, the Augustana Alumni Leadership Award was given to Emil Yim, a 5th year bachelor of science student double majoring in kinesiology and psychology. Emil is very active on campus, having been a resident assistant, a campus ambassador, a photographer for the student run newspaper the Dagligtale, a photographer for the student run magazine the Medium, a member of the cross-country running team, 4th year representative on the Augustana Student’s Association, and a representative on the students union. Alongside those activities, Emil is a member of many clubs, including the Earthwise, history and science clubs, and has also worked at the café, in the cafeteria and at the climbing wall. Emil modestly admits “I feel that there are others who contribute more to this campus than I have” but still strives to give back to Augustana and help out wherever he can. Congratulations Emil, on a much deserved award!

Two years ago, in my Circle message I wrote about change. One year ago, I wrote about transition. With a vision in hand and leadership transitions in the university mostly complete, an appropriate theme for this year’s Circle is ambition. I am proud of Augustana’s lofty ambitions and of the University of Alberta’s ambitious vision for Augustana.

The latter first: this past fall, after a year of extensive consultation, President David Turpin and the Board of Governors released For the Public Good, the university’s new strategic plan. Objective Nine of that plan focuses specifically on the multi-campus nature of the university. With reference to Augustana, it calls for an effort to strengthen our campus “as a leading liberal arts college, and as a living laboratory for teaching and learning innovation, to the benefit of the entire university.” This is a role that my colleagues and I embrace. We are encouraged by the growing recognition that it is not just Augustana which has been strengthened by the merger in 2004; it is the entire university, which can learn and borrow from Augustana as it focuses increasing attention on the quality of the undergraduate student experience.

Here on campus our ambitions at this time are focused on preparations for 2017-18, the launch year for several exciting initiatives. I’m pleased to provide a short summary.

First, we are busy with details and logistics related to both the Augustana Calendar, which will change the rhythms of our traditional terms to accommodate more experiential learning opportunities for students, and the First-Year Seminar Program, a new investment in student success and a proven “high-impact practice.”

Second, we will soon complete the Alver & Arlene Person Pedway, which will link the second floors of the Library and Founders’ Hall. This passage-way will connect Learning–Advising–Beyond services at one end with a planned Learning Commons at the other. The Learning Commons will not only create new visibility for the Writing Centre, study skills workshops, accommodations services, counseling and other programming. It will also facilitate one-stop convenience for students. For staff in the library, Student Life, and LAB, it will create new opportunities for collaborative planning and program delivery.

Third, over the coming summer we will complete ambitious renovations of three science labs and related support spaces in the Science Extension. This project, which is funded through federal and provincial funds, will be the first stage of a more ambitious phased plan to create improved, 21st century learning environments.

Finally, we are raising our philanthropic ambitions and focusing our fundraising primarily on programming needs and expanded learning opportunities for students, especially through research, community service, practical and other experiences that provide opportunities to apply and test classroom learning beyond the boundaries of the campus.

Kudos to our faculty and staff. The scope of our ambition is made possible by their dedication to student learning, their openness to change and their willingness to dream. And thanks to all of you. We couldn’t embrace the future with such confidence were it not for the generous support of our alumni and friends.

Warm regards,
Dean Allen Berger
AUGUSTANA WELCOMES NEW TREATY BEAR STATUE

In late September, Augustana welcomed the Treaty Bear. The statue is a marker bear that exists as one in a series of bears installed throughout treaty six territory (which includes the larger Sweetgrass Bear sculpture on North campus), and will remain at Augustana on a one-year loan from sculptor Stewart Steinhauer of the Saddle Cree Nation. As a visual representation of the treaty relationship that we at Augustana are all a part of, the Treaty Bear calls us to engage together in the important work of reconciliation, work that Augustana is deeply committed to.

The objective of these statues, according to sculptor Steinhauer is to “create an experiential moment for observers, transforming them... into participants” and brings to our campus “Indigenous knowledge, passed generation to generation [that] has been preserved and recorded in a specific format, both in form and practice: in granite.” As a smooth, rounded, inherently welcoming statue that evokes a desire to touch, the Treaty Bear reads “We Are All Related” in both English and Cree syllabics, and certainly lends itself to an experiential moment for those who stop to ponder the statue and its meaning.

The Treaty Bear was welcomed to campus with a ceremony that included Associate Dean Academic Dr. Karsten Mundel, Aboriginal Student Office coordinator Megan Caldwell, and elder Mary Moonias from Louis Bull Nation in Maskwacis who performed a blessing. It is our hope that members of the Augustana community and guests to our campus will visit the statue to pause, reflect and experience our treaty relationships in the way that sculptor Stewart Steinhauer envisions.

A GREAT TIME TO BE AT AUGUSTANA

By Cameron Raynor, Augustana Medium

It’s been just over four years now since I arrived at Augustana. Although the decision to move was impromptu, I couldn’t have chosen better if I tried. I didn’t know anything about liberal arts, interdisciplinary education or think much about class schedules at the time, but I don’t think there’s been a better time to be an Augustana student.

Over the past few years, liberal arts and less specialized approaches to education have started to come into their own. At the same time, Augustana has positioned itself as a laboratory for innovative teaching. Augustana students are more often than not the first to benefit from new approaches to postsecondary education from professors that care about teaching.

There are few other campuses I’ve encountered where there is so much regular interaction between students and faculty who are studying different disciplines. And exposure to other disciplines is important.

Many of the challenges facing the world today require solutions that will come from collaborating and working between disciplines. It doesn’t make sense to specialize early in a world where the pace of change is faster than ever. World leading companies of today often weren’t even on the radar four years ago. In many ways, the pace of change is faster than the rate at which people can become educated for it.

The idea that breadth and variety is an essential part of a great education program isn’t new. Stanford, Yale and Harvard all have liberal arts or breadth requirements not unlike the Augustana Core. It seems that now, more than ever, it is Augustana’s time to shine.
“At Augustana, I learned what it was like to be heard and helped by others. I want to offer that same experience to my clients and to have a positive impact on their lives.”

Tony Nguyen has an ambitious goal: to change people’s approach to fitness.

While growing up in Whitehorse, Yukon, Tony was an avid athlete. After high school, he was recruited to play on the Augustana men’s basketball team. As a member of the Vikings, he learned skills such as teamwork, communication, problem-solving, and time-management—skills which would serve him well later when he started up his own business.

Tony, a Registered Kinesiologist, has co-founded the Edmonton-based company F.R.E.E. Fitness.

His company’s innovative model allows a client free coaching for two weeks during what Tony calls the “commitment phase.” The trainer helps with a physical training program and a review of eating habits. Tony holds clients accountable for meeting their commitments and helps them eliminate unhealthy habits, preventing them from reaching their fitness goals.

After two weeks, Tony explains, “If the client has followed through during the commitment phase, the client earns the privilege to ‘pay how you feel.’ We show we care about our clients’ health without putting a price on our service.” The company also offers free fitness camps outdoors every Friday evening with the goal of giving people a positive experience and the confidence to become more active, whether at home, outdoors, or at a gym.

Tony encourages his clients to eat healthfully, to exercise for fun, to live balanced lifestyles, and to love themselves. This is harder than it sounds, he says, in a society that bombards us with weight-loss advertisements. “The traditional fitness industry thrives on making people feel dissatisfied with how they look. We can lose sight of what being healthy feels like because we are chasing an unrealistic image of what fitness looks like.”

“I still love sports and the high I get after a sweaty workout,” Tony says. “But most of all, I love meeting new people, helping clients, promoting fitness, and giving back to the community. At Augustana, I learned what it was like to be heard and helped by others. I want to offer that same experience to my clients and to have a positive impact on their lives.”
Nicole Macdonald has known since she was in kindergarten that she would become a veterinarian.

Nicole studied biology and chemistry at Augustana. Not only did her professors help her achieve the marks she would need for veterinary college, but they also gave her opportunities for hands-on experience.

In her third year, Nicole applied to the Western Veterinary College in Saskatoon. “Having a well-rounded education from Augustana gave me an edge,” she says. “I had good writing skills, and with my history minor, I stood out from other applicants.”

In her third year, Nicole applied to the Western Veterinary College in Saskatoon. “Having a well-rounded education from Augustana gave me an edge,” she says. “I had good writing skills, and with my history minor, I stood out from other applicants.”

In the summers, Nicole, who had grown up around cats and dogs, focussed on gaining more experience with large animals. One summer, she lived with a friend’s parents in Oyen so she could volunteer in a rural vet clinic. Another year, she spent six weeks in rural Uganda working with goats through Vets Without Borders.

After graduating, Nicole began working at a mixed-animal practice in Ponoka. Along with two other vets, she cares for cats, dogs, horses, cattle—and occasionally sheep and goats. “I love all animals. They don’t judge, and they love you anyway.” Although animals can’t tell her what’s wrong when they are ill, Nicole enjoys the challenge of figuring out the problem and making things better.

Physically, a vet’s work can be demanding. Nicole is often on call during calving season and is called upon to do tough procedures like C-sections. However, the hardest part of the job is emotional. When an animal dies as a result of injuries, or when an owner decides it’s time to euthanize a beloved pet, it takes a toll on Nicole. “It’s draining,” she says. “I’m never the same. They take a piece of me when they go.”

But the rewards of the job outweigh the challenges. “It’s the little victories that keep me going,” Nicole says, “like saving a golden retriever that has been hit by a car or delivering a live calf during a C-section. That makes my day. Then I know I’ve done a good job.”
When administrators at Bermuda’s international airport needed to upgrade the approach lighting system, there was only one option: build new platforms in the ocean. However, driving steel piles into an environmentally sensitive bay would disturb not only seagrass beds but a number of endangered species. The airport needed a construction plan that met regulatory requirements and minimized impact to these species and their habitats. That’s where Joël Gervais came in.

Joël, a biologist and environmental scientist at Associated Engineering in Edmonton, completed assessment for the project and weighed the environmental sensitivities against the construction needs to create a construction plan that would mitigate environmental impacts.

“It was an interesting challenge,” Joël recalls. “I had to apply my usual freshwater ecology and construction knowledge to a marine and coastal environment, learn about marine biology, and teach myself about cetaceans, coral reefs, coastal reptiles, and marine chemistry.”

Joël first got his feet wet as a biology student taking samples and measurements in Stony Creek, Miquelon Lake, the Sturgeon River, and ravines south of Camrose. “Our professors took us into the field to apply what we’d learned in the classroom,” he explains. “The hands-on experience was invaluable.” He credits Dr. Hood, Dr. Hvenegaard, Dr. Audet, and Dr. Hallstrom for kindling his desire and drive for ongoing learning and application of knowledge in everyday scenarios.

Joël loves the challenge of developing innovative solutions to environmental problems. He is now consulting on projects in Edmonton and throughout Alberta, Saskatchewan, Northwest Territories, and the national parks. His work often includes planning and assessment for construction and reclamation where sensitive fish, wildlife, and plants are involved.

As new environmental protection policies are implemented, companies and governments need help finding new ways to operate that meet or exceed regulations. “Environmental degradation is no longer an accepted cost of doing business,” Joël explains, “and many of the new policies are creating new challenges. We take on many one-off projects with unique problems, and come up with solutions that haven’t been tried before. As an environmental scientist, I wear many different hats, and I am always learning. Augustana prepared me for that.”
In Grade 9, Shay Barker knew Augustana was the right choice for her. “When you come from a small town and graduate with the same 30 people you went to kindergarten with, it’s important to go to a community-focused university where you can be more than a number.” As it turns out, community has become the focus of Shay’s career.

Shay’s professors challenged her to think in new ways. “Classes were never just about content,” she remembers. “At Augustana, you don’t simply graduate with letters after your name. You graduate with a solid foundation to become the person and professional you want to be.”

Shay’s team is implementing a 10-year strategy for economic development that integrates the concept of placemaking. Placemaking connects a person’s place to economic vibrancy, community resiliency, and community identity. It encourages the creation of public spaces that promote pride of place and a sense of community. “When people love their place,” Shay explains, “they are more likely to spend time and money there, support local businesses, and participate in local recreation. The fabric of the community is continually strengthened as more people fall in love with their place, resulting in a strong and diverse community.”

Shay’s passion for community was born in Jasper and fostered at Augustana, and it continues to guide her career in economic development. “I value community,” she says, “and I want my career choice to make a positive impact.”

Today, Shay is an Economic Development Officer for the City of Airdrie. As part of a team of five, her goal is to attract new businesses to Airdrie and support the retention and expansion of local companies. She helps clients find suitable spaces for their businesses and advises them on the city’s policies and processes.

Shay is proud to be a part of a well-respected team that wins awards for its projects and strategies. “Our municipality is forward thinking, growing, and establishing itself as a major hub for industry in Alberta,” she says. In fact, Airdrie has been named one of Canada’s top places to start and grow businesses.

NEW EXTENDED EDUCATION PROGRAMMING

By Kate McConnell

In 2015, Augustana launched the Augustana Extended Education (AEE) program. Utilizing Augustana’s liberal arts and sciences faculty expertise through intensive, open enrolment short term courses, seminars, workshops, and certificate programs, AEE programs are designed for community members and professionals from every sector who seek to expand their skills at a top 4 Canadian University. Over the past year and a half, AEE has launched 7 new programs with repeat delivery due to high demand, to over 150 attendees from 47 rural communities.

New Program: Creative Leadership through Arts
This winter, AEE will launch a pilot of Creative Leadership through Arts: Leadership & Playfulness, the first in a series of 1-day short courses designed to offer a modern and innovative approach to developing and fine-tuning leadership skills through arts-based practices and activities, including improv, music compilation, creative writing, and filmmaking. This program is for those already in various levels of leadership positions and those looking to move into a position of leadership. No creative experience is expected or required.

Program Highlights

- Clarify and enhance your leadership abilities through facilitated discussions on leadership theory, case studies, group networking, combined with unique arts-based workshops
- Learn how to build meaningful connections within your team by evaluating how perception is influenced, and by integrating diversity
- Acquire the tools to creatively overcome hurdles and develop ‘outside the box’ solutions for challenges
- Explore creative ways to effectively adapt to quickly changing environments and circumstances
- Learn how to ‘inspire’ rather than ‘instruct’

More information about Augustana’s Extended Education Program, including courses on offer can be found at www.ualberta.ca/augustana/programs/community/extended-education

AUGUSTANA OUTREACH

AUGUSTANA ALUMNI COUNCIL REPRESENTATIVE: JEFFREY BEHRENS, ’10 BA

In his first of a three year term as Augustana’s alumni council representative, Jeffrey Behrens graduated from the University of Alberta’s Augustana Faculty with a bachelor of arts, double majoring in political science and history. He served as President of the Augustana Student Association and received multiple leadership and academic awards during his time there. Jeffrey also earned a master of arts degree in comparative politics and international relations from Queen’s University in Kingston, Ontario.

As a political communications specialist, Jeffrey has worked for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta in numerous roles, most recently as Legislative Assistant to the Capital Region Caucus. He recently returned to the University of Alberta with Facilities and Operations.

Diagnosed with a degenerative retinal disease as a child, Jeff is a passionate advocate and supporter of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and has volunteered in numerous capacities with the organization and affiliated physicians.

In his spare time Jeffrey enjoys cooking and continuing his research in European politics and Church history.
BATTLE RIVER SCHOOL DIVISION PROGRAMMING
Contributors: Alexis Anderson and Charlene Brown

Augustana’s partnership with the Battle River School Division (BRSD) is one of mutual benefit. As part of a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) between Augustana and BRSD, both organizations work to foster a distinctive and innovative relationship towards the end of student learning by developing programs to connect our students with those within the community.

Our MOU includes a variety of joint and cooperative activities and one such program is the Grade 7 Science Fair, in its second year of partnership between Charlie Killam School, Our Lady of Mount Pleasant School, and the Learning-Advising-Beyond Office at Augustana. Augustana students start working in classrooms in September to support and mentor grade 7 students in creating innovative projects to present at a science fair that takes place on Augustana Campus in February. This all-day event consists of a variety of activities including a welcome from the Dean, the science fair event and judging, an exciting chemistry demonstration, educational sessions planned by Augustana students, and new this year, exploring the science of music! In addition to hosting the grade 7 students and their parents, we bring guest judges from the community such as members of city council, members of local businesses and representatives from the two school divisions, as well as university faculty.

Another is the Klassics for Kids program which arose out of a focus group in 2010 that saw a gap in classical music programming focused on young people within our community. As a result, Augustana’s music conservatory administrator, Charlene Brown, and local elementary school administrators began producing a concert performance that takes place annually and brings young students onto campus to engage in classical music through a storyline or theme. These performances are no longer than an hour, and are attended by kindergarten to grade four students, as higher level classes have more opportunity for band instruction. An instant success, Klassics for Kids uses music to teach and inspire fun.

Lastly, a number of junior and senior high school students from Charlie Killam, Bawlf, and Ermineskin schools (although the last is not a part of BRSD) were invited to Augustana in October to attend a screening of the documentary The Pass System, followed by a panel discussion with the director Alex Williams, Indigenous studies and history professor Daniel Sims, and Bruce Cutknife, member of Samson Cree First Nation and Indigenous Education Coordinator for the Nipisihkopahk Education Authority. The documentary, which is an investigation of First Nations people living under and resisting a system of racial segregation in Canada, was shown at the Jeanne & Peter Lougheed Performing Arts Centre, and gave students the chance to grapple with a difficult subject by asking questions of experts on the topic. It is through events and relationships like these that we hope to strengthen ourselves, as well as the community around us.
VIKINGS ROOTS RUN DEEP

The Vikings hockey tradition has gone on strong through our years as Camrose Lutheran College, Augustana University College, and finally, the University of Alberta’s Augustana Campus. A Canadian institution that boasts both competition and collegiality, hockey seems to have a lasting impact even on those who are not regular players. And those who have come to Camrose to hone their talent make lifelong friends, becoming part of a tradition where “Vikings” is more than a simple team name, but a family. Ken, Mike and Paul Lovsin embody that dynamic quite literally, as two generations of players that can’t seem to get enough of Augustana, of hockey, and of bearing the name “Vikings”.

Hockey flows through the veins of the Lovsin boys. Brothers Mike and Ken grew up in Peace River with sticks and pucks as much a part of their winter as the ice and snow. Mike was first encouraged to attend Augustana (then Camrose Lutheran College) by Larry Stewart, who played on the National Championship team in ’74/’75, as well as Joe Voytechek, who had coached the championship team, and was still the coach when Mike became a Viking in 1979.

“It was my first time moving away from home; I had all of those feelings of nervousness and excitement” Mike recalls fondly as one of the highlights of his time here, followed by another: the trip the Vikings took overseas the Christmas of 1979 to play in Finland and Sweden as one of the first amateur teams to enter the Soviet Union at the time. Mike spoke not of the number of goals he scored, or how well they ranked in the tournament, but instead about the young men he met while playing for the Vikings, many of whom he is still in contact with today. “You forget about the wins and losses, but not the people.”

Ken Lovsin saw what a great experience his brother Mike had had playing and studying in Camrose, so it was natural for him to follow suit, attending Camrose Lutheran College from 1984-1986. Ken continued on to have an impressive hockey career, playing a game in the NHL and several as part of Team Canada, even winning silver at the 1994 Winter Olympics in Lillehammer, Norway. “Growing up, every four years we watched the Olympics on TV and I dreamed of playing for my country at an event like that,” Ken recollected. “My time at Augustana helped to hone the skills I needed to make the progression to the Olympic program.”

And now, thirty-or-so odd years later, Ken’s nephew and Mike’s son Paul Lovsin dons the same jersey as the men in the family before
Paul plans to carry on his family’s tradition in more ways than one. A first year business economics student, he hopes to take over the family’s grocery store chain after he completes his degree. The Freson Bros. chain boasts 15 small-town stores across Alberta which are all owned and operated by Mike, Ken and their third brother Doug.

Paul’s dad is excited about his son not only playing as a Viking as he once did, but for having the opportunity to stay, live and graduate from the University of Alberta’s Augustana Campus, something that was not yet possible for him as a student of Camrose Lutheran College. The small class sizes and tight-knit community does not only allow a better environment in which to learn, but also to make connections, two things Mike recognizes as “a good foundation for the rest of your life.”

“The best time of my life was in Camrose, I wish that for Paul too.”

Come celebrate the Viking tradition with Mike and Paul Lovsin (Ken sends his regrets) at this year’s Hockey Alumni Weekend, which takes place January 27th to 28th, 2017. To register, visit http://aug.ualberta.ca/hockeyalumni.

Paul was this year’s recipient of the annual $1000 Alumni Entrance Award, given to an incoming student descended from an alumni. This award, along with the Alumni Leadership Award, is supported by several alumni that pledge monthly, yearly, or give one-time gifts to the Alumni Awards Initiative. Thank you for your support!

AUGUSTANA TO HOST CCAA CURLING NATIONALS
By Melissa Wilk, Augustana Medium

After a successful curling season last year, Augustana was selected to host the 2017 CCAA Curling National Championships in March 2017. The championships take place at the 100-year-old Rose City Curling Club.

“This is huge for Augustana. This is the first time Augustana has ever held a National Championship, and it’s a great opportunity to showcase Augustana, our curling program, and our rink,” said Roger Galenza, head coach of the curling team. Galenza said that the National Championships are an excellent way to recruit new players. “People will see what we have to offer. It’s absolutely wonderful for us to have Nationals here.”

Galenza has been coaching the Augustana Curling team for several years. In the 2014/2015 season, he won the ACAC Coach of the Year award.

Galenza said that last year’s season brought a lot of success for the men’s team. “The men won silver at the ACAC, and then went on to win bronze at the 2016 CCAA Curling National Champions—that was a big success.

“The women’s team didn’t quite make the ACAC conference finals, but our lead and second ended up getting the ACAC All-Conference Award.”

Galenza said he thinks the women’s team will be strong this year. “We have new students coming in, as well as the returning players. I’m looking forward to a real positive year for the women.”

Jensen Manners, a curler and second-year management student, said that she is looking forward to a fun and exciting season. “We have Nationals to look forward to in March, and it will be a great experience. Nationals will bring a lot of nation-wide curlers to the area, and the Augustana Curling program will get invaluable exposure,” said Manners.

Manners won the Female Athlete of the Year award at Augustana’s 2016 Colour Night. “It was an honour to be recognized for my hard work and dedication. Curling is what I love to do.”

Manners also won the ACAC All-Conference Award last year, along with her teammate Katelyn Skolski, a second-year kinesiology student.

Skolski said that she is looking forward to working with a great group of people this year.

“We have lots of new talent coming to the team, and I’m excited to be representing Augustana at Nationals.”

AUGUSTANA UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH ON TYPE 1 DIABETES

While a number of University students fill their summers with beaches and campfires to de-stress from their year of hard work, fourth year science student Deanna Funk remained in the classroom and in the lab.

As a research assistant to Augustana physical education professor Dr. Jane Yardley for the last two summers, Deanna has been studying islet cell transplantation in patients with type 1 diabetes. This research began out of Dr. Yardley’s work as a member of the Alberta Diabetes Institute, the world leader in the transplantation of islet cells, a process which takes healthy islet cells from donor cadaveric organs and places them in the liver of diabetic patients to reverse the effects of insulin deficiency. Dr. Yardley, along with a few colleagues on North Campus, is in the process of testing participants to examine the effects of aerobic exercise on blood glucose in islet transplant patients, but before the work began, the group had to do a widely cast study of the information that was already available; that’s where Deanna came in.

“My task was to find any and all studies on islet cell transplant recipients performing exercise and to write a literature review on the topic” Deanna explained. A daunting assignment for any scholar, and an impressive undertaking, especially when it comes to undergraduate research. Deanna rose to the challenge, writing a literature review that went through a number of rounds of editing before being published in the NRC Research Press’ journal of Applied Physiology, Nutrition, and Metabolism. Deanna then presented some of the data from this study at the 19th annual Canadian Diabetes Association Professional Conference on October 29th in Ottawa.

Dr. Yardley continues to be impressed by Deanna, whom she describes as “an organized, motivated, and industrious student, who is able to work with a great deal of independence. She...is producing better work than several masters’ level students that I have worked with in the past.” As for Deanna, she’s simply glad for the experience. “I am very grateful to have had the opportunity to publish as an undergraduate student,” Deanna said. “I am honored and humbled to have worked with Jane and to have experienced the research world in the way I have.”
AUGUSTANA IN THE NEW STRATEGIC PLAN

The University of Alberta’s 2016 strategic plan For the Public Good posits Augustana as “a living laboratory for teaching and learning innovation, to the benefit of the entire university.” taken this call to action seriously, beginning with the implementation of a new calendar in 2017 to help connect students through experiential learning opportunities, and provide an alternative to the traditionally rigid university structure.

However, the onus is not merely on how students learn. What about the ways in which we teach, the courses and even the environments? Augustana has begun a number of initiatives to offer different ways of teaching to result in the best undergraduate education possible.

“This semester we have introduced a new classroom that is furnished with trapezoidal tables that have the flexibility to be used for group work as well as larger group seminars” says Associate Dean Academic Karsten Mundel, who spearheaded the initiative. The classroom also uses large touch screens so that students can collaborate digitally as they work in teams, and is used for classes taught in a non-traditional way. “If you wanted to lecture, it’d actually be really hard to” says Associate Dean Teaching Janet Wesselius, who credits the classroom as a way to foster a different level of student engagement and a different way of learning in general.

Another example of this innovative way of learning and teaching is the digital humanities course that Augustana will be taking part in through our association with COPLAC, the Council of Public Liberal Arts Colleges. These courses will be co-run and team taught through video conference technology, with students from a number of COPLAC institutions contributing to a class that defies physical limitations.

The last initiative is a teaching commons, to be available to faculty next January. An online repository on pedagogy, the teaching commons will include online discussions and blogs on best practices, and will be open for all interested faculty to join. As a small campus, we already know how collaboration inspires success, and fostering this sense of community engagement is one of the ways in which we hope to teach innovatively.

We hope you’ll always remember where you came from and take advantage of opportunities to stay connected with your fellow Augustana/AUC/CLC alumni. Not only can you benefit personally and professionally, but together we can make a difference in our communities and around the world!

SPIRIT OF THE LAND CONFERENCE

By Carey Anglestad

Spirit of the Land, a project coordinated by Augustana’s Chester Ronning Centre, hosted their 5th annual conference from November 4-6, 2016. Under the theme of Reconciling Land, Life and Livelihood, the conference aimed to provide a safe and welcoming space for the community to come together and talk about issues of reconciliation between Settler-Indigenous relations as well as a wider reconciliation with ecology, economy, community and spirituality.

Topics included

- The relationship between economy, community and ecology
- Hopeful visions for land, water and agriculture
- Settler-Indigenous Reconciliation in Canada
- How to grow micro-greens
- Clean energy in Canada

Set up in a round-table format, the conference was centered on the dialogue between different members of the community — from politicians/city councillors to farmers, local business owners and industry workers. Students and community members came together to discuss each presentation, and pose questions to the speakers.

Speakers at the conference came from across Western Canada and Alberta. The Friday night keynote was Dr. Alexandria Wilson, a community leader and professor at the University of Saskatchewan’s College of Education, and an organizer for Idle No More, working to protect water, land and Indigenous sovereignty. On Saturday, Treaty Six Grand Chief Randy Ermineskin and Karen Mahon, Canadian director of STAND and environmentalist, spoke in the morning. After lunch, participants heard from a panel on the topic of “Growing the Ecological Soil, Growing the Community Soul” from Siddhartha, founder and director of Pipal Tree in Bangalore, India; Kim Cornish, founder of the Alberta-based Food, Water, Wellness Foundation; and Ryan Mason, owner/farmer with Reclaim Urban Farm in Edmonton. Finally, David Dodge, of Green Energy Futures and chair of Energy Efficiency Alberta, a new $648 million dollar crown corporation, presented. On Sunday morning, hands-on workshops were offered where participants could learn about solar energy or microgreens.

Dean Allen Berger, city council member Agnes Hoveland and MLA Bruce Hinkley welcomed participants to the conference, which began with a pipe ceremony, and ended with a round dance.

“When I first attended the conference four years ago...I was very newly introduced to these ideas of environmentalism and living in a sustainable way. I was intimidated by them. I felt I had no authority to be able to say what was right and what was wrong, but when we went to the conference and we heard the speakers and had chances to talk at our round tables, my opinion was respected. I was able to hear other people’s opinions and I just felt it was a really nice space for everyone in the community to come together.” - Carley Angelstad, Spirit of the Land Assistant Program Coordinator

“We are promoting a safe and welcoming atmosphere. This way we can have open, respectful, honest conversations and see what new solutions or ways of approaching the issues will come out of it.” - Rajan Rathnavalu, Project Coordinator

What is your fondest Augustana memory?

“Attending all the Viking Cup tournaments over the years and in 2002 watching our Vikings actually win that tournament (of which my future son-in-law was part of).”

What kind of legacy do you hope to leave at Augustana?

“I have always held one thought in the front of my mind over my many years on this campus... how can I be sure to do what I can to create meaningful experiences for students? It is my hope that the many, many students that have passed through my teams and classes left Augustana with an understanding of their role as persons who can be helpful in creating a more respectful, caring world.”

RYAN MASON RECEIVES ALUMNI INNOVATION AWARD

Augustana’s alumnus Ryan Mason, along with his business partner Cathryn Sprague, received an alumni innovation award last September for their contributions to urban agriculture and food sustainability. In the first year of its inception, the alumni innovation award is given to those who have significantly impacted their profession, community, the U of A, or society at large by developing an innovative program, process or product. Ryan and Cathryn seem to have checked off all four on this list, as they successfully began and continue to operate an urban sustainable farming business that grows and delivers fresh, delicious produce.

Ryan received his bachelor of arts from Augustana in 2009 and went on to complete a master of science (‘15) at North campus. It was there, while doing graduate studies at the U of A’s Faculty of Agricultural, Life and Environmental Sciences, that he met Cathryn Sprague, BCom (‘09), MSc (‘14), as they both worked on master’s degrees in environmental sociology. With this shared passion for gardening and food security, Ryan and Cathryn decided to reclaim vacant urban land and use the space for growing food in an effort to improve the local food system. In May 2014, Reclaim Urban Farm was born.

Now, Ryan and Cathryn work 15 plots of land borrowed from community partners throughout the Edmonton region. They focus on growing nutritious food with the lowest environmental impact and on educating local communities on growth and sustainability. They plant every week year-round, including micro-greens indoors during the winter, and harvest on average 45 kilograms per week, easily doubling or tripling that during the summer months. Reclaim shares its produce with its partners and supplies the City Market Downtown, retail locations, several Edmonton restaurants and have recently opened a Community Supported Agriculture program wherein customers can order boxes of fresh vegetables (and sometimes fruit) directly from their website. Congratulations Ryan and Cathryn, keep up the delicious work!

BRIGHT HORIZONS FOR ALUMNA KOREN LIGHTNING-EARLE

Augustana alumna Koren Lightning-Earle (‘04) also received an alumni award last September. The alumni horizon award, which recognizes outstanding achievements of University of Alberta alumni early in their careers, was given to Koren for her leadership work in local and national Aboriginal communities.

Koren is Cree from Samson Cree Nation and is not only a leader within the Aboriginal community, but a role model for her peers as well as younger generations. She received her bachelor of arts in sociology (‘04) from Augustana and went on to complete a bachelor of laws (‘07) at North campus, as well as a master of laws at York University (‘16).

Along with her impressive academic success, Koren is committed to enhancing the future of First Nations peoples by taking on many roles within her community, including president of the Indigenous Bar Association, vice-president of the Kasohkowew Child Wellness Society, co-chair of the First Nations Women’s Economic Security Council and member of the Federal Court Aboriginal Bar Liaison Committee. Koren was also an elected council member for Samson Cree Nation from 2011-2014 and is co-founder of Hub, a community mobilization program to help reduce crime. She is also a sessional instructor at Maskwacis Cultural College, a post-secondary school within the Four Nations of Maskwacis, Alberta. As if the sheer number of her achievements listed isn’t enough, Koren is also married, has two young daughters, and is the sole practitioner at Thunderbird Law. Congratulations Koren!
THE ALVER AND ARLENE PERSON PEDWAY
By Sydney Tancowny

Camrose Lutheran College alumni Alver and Arlene Person have brought many gifts to our campus. Ardent supporters and volunteers for all things Augustana, both could be found at many events and everywhere on campus over the years. The construction of the Alver and Arlene Person Pedway, made possible in part from leadership gifts in their name, will link the second floor of Founders’ Hall to the second floor of the Forum Building. The pedway is phase two of the Founders’ Hall renovation project that has renewed our iconic century old building to accommodate learning on campus for our second one hundred years. “The pedway will move students through the two busiest buildings on campus and connect them to services essential to maximizing the opportunity of a liberal arts degree,” said Dean Allen Berger.

The second floor of Founders’ Hall houses the Learning~ Advising~Beyond (LAB) student services, and with the construction of the pedway, an opportunity was created to build an innovative academic centre for students on the opposite end as well. The pedway will connect student services in LAB to the planned Learning Commons on the Library’s second floor—a multi-use area for student engagement, tutorials and workshops, as well as access to learning support services. On one end of the Person Pedway, students will receive help on how to create their academic plan and on the other side they will receive support with putting their plan into action. Alver and Arlene would surely appreciate the opportunity this new pedway brings to campus.

Alver and Arlene Person began their association with Augustana together: they met and graduated from Camrose Lutheran College and the institution became part of who they were as they built their life together in Camrose. When asked about the couple, Bonita Anderson, Augustana’s Director of Development, told of how Arlene had come to “check her out” on her first day on the job. Two weeks later at the Battle River Community Foundation’s annual Community Builders Dinner (where several years later they were recognized as Community Builders themselves), Arlene took Bonita by the hand and introduced her to the entire community. “That was Arlene,” said Bonita, “a true ambassador of Augustana and so passionate about her community.”

Alver was a gentleman, described as soft-spoken and old fashioned in the best sort of way. After graduating from Augustana, he became the Director of the Burgar Funeral Home, a position that was described as a perfect fit for his compassionate nature. When age and reduced mobility limited Alver’s attendance to events on campus, the couple, with Arlene as his caregiver, continued to make campus visits a priority. When Alver passed away in 2011, the whole community attended his funeral—a true measure of respect for a man who loved his community.

“They were the kind of people you love to just sit with and have a conversation,” said Debra Olafson in the Alumni office, “and Arlene could be depended upon to help us host visitors on campus — she knew everyone!”

Alver and Arlene were very generous to Augustana and, over the years, supported many initiatives and programs on our campus with Chaplaincy, the Ronning Centre, and the Music Department as frequent recipients of their philanthropy. Forty-five years ago, they were among the first to establish a student award in the Community Awards Program at Augustana — a program designed to engage the local community in supporting student success. For Alver and Arlene, the growth and strength of a community comes from within, and supporting your community is not something you simply think about, it is something that you do.

Funds for the Alver and Arlene Person Pedway have been given in the couple’s honour by their two children and their spouses: John [CLC ’84] and Carmen Person [CLC ’88] and Steve and Kathy Haugen. The pedway is projected for completion at the end of January 2017. With the Learning-Advising-Beyond offices already built and available to students, and the Learning Commons scheduled to be completed this coming summer, the Alver and Arlene Person Pedway is the next step in supporting student success at Augustana. Once again, Alver and Arlene are at home on campus.

Fran (Daly) Reed ’59 is co-chair of the Grateful Grannies in Camrose. She recently traveled to Uganda for the first Uganda National Grandmothers Gathering. This organization supports the Stephen Lewis Foundation which benefits African grandmothers caring for orphaned grandchildren and others affected by HIV/AIDS. Fran enjoyed the tours of two of the Ugandan grandmothers’ homes that were funded by the Stephen Lewis Foundation. Fran spoke on the land grabbing that often occurs and can leave the grandmothers with nothing and nowhere to live to raise their grandchildren. The land grabbing happens when other male relatives in the family take the land owned by the deceased, instead of leaving it to the grandmothers who, according to Ugandan law, should be able to inherit the land to raise the orphaned grandchildren. Fran loved the excitement and joy these grandmothers showed over the smallest of gifts and possessions, such as a new cement floor. Thanks for all your work Fran!
