Population persistence under climate change and genetic consequences

This talk concerns integrodifference equations modelling the evolution of species under climate change. I will first present the persistence theory. It is followed by the effects of climate change on the persistence. Finally, I will discuss the inside dynamics used to describe the genetic diversity.

This talk is based on a joint work with Mark Lewis and Nathan Marculis.